BOARD OF TRADE'S
AUSTRALIAN BALLOT
 A Clever System of Voting Used at the Annual Meeting.
 A great deal of difficulty is sometimes experienced in large assemblies in the taking of a secret ballot with dispatch, and at the same time protecting the ballot from padding by those ineligible to a vote. To solve the riddle of such a situation on the occasion of the board of trade dinner and annual meeting, Secretary Harry Welch devised a plan that worked beautifully, and it is herewith given for the benefit of any who might desire to use it, or something like it, in the future.
 At the dinner was a mixed gathering of the members of the board who were entitled to vote and a great many guests who were not entitled to vote. The voting was an incident in the middle of the proceedings. The guests could not be kicked out very courteously, and it was desired to do the voting as quickly as possible and go on with the program. At the same time there must be free choice of candidates, or more nominees than there were places to fill. All these things had been considered in advance.

 Mr. Welch had secured printed cards about 3 1/4 inches in size, on which were twenty squares, or blocks, a half inch square, like a map of a section of land cut up into twenty tracts of equal size. Each little square was numbered, the numbers running from 1 to 20, like the sections in a township. Each member of the board was provided with a card and an envelope in which to enclose it.
 At the appointed time a nominating committee reported the names of twenty candidates, of which fifteen were to be elected. The twenty names were placed with black crayon in large letters on a billboard covered with paper, written large enough so everybody in the room could read them, the names being numbered from 1 to 20. The members then voted by drawing a mark in the square opposite the number of the fifteen candidates for which they desired to vote. They then enclosed the cards in their envelopes and wrote their names on the envelopes, which were collected by tellers.
 Each envelope was inspected by Secretary Welch, who checked the name off the voting register, turned the envelope face down and passed it to a clerk, who opened it and threw the envelope away without seeing the address, and passed the card along to the second clerk, who tabulated the returns. Nobody knew how any other person voted, everybody cast a carefully devised written ballot of his own choosing, and the voters sat around and enjoyed the fun. Best of all, very little time was consumed.

 The plan might be adapted to any number of candidates and except for a little greater legibility it was not necessary to even have the cards printed. Voting could be done by having the voter merely write the numbers of his choice on a blank card. But the board of trade always wants to do things just a little bit better than anybody else.

LOS ANGELES TIMES
DREAMS A LITTLE
 But the Times is Slow—The Dream Is Almost Realized.
 Now that the irrigation dreams of the Salt River valley are beginning to come true, others are getting in line in the dream business also. The following is from the Los Angeles Times:
 "The Roosevelt dam has created one of the largest artificial bodies of water in the world. The day is not far distant when it will be described by Bulwer's lines regarding Lake Como—
 Shut out by Alpine hills from the rude world
 . . . A clear lake, margined with fruits of gold
 And whispering myrtle, glassing softest skies
 All cloudless save with rare and rosyate shadows.
 "Palaces and cottages will be erected along its borders. It will be stocked with trout and bass and pickered and carp. Swans and little steamboats and gondolas will float upon its surface. It will be one of the beauty spots of the state of Arizona."
 But the Times is not much of a dreamer. About half of this vision is already realized. The lake has already been partially stocked with fish and numerous houses have been erected along its borders, though there will be many more. There are no steamboats on the lake yet, so far as the Republican is advised, but there are two or three gasoline launches and lots of row boats, and there will be many more.

foretold universal suffrage, representative government nor the modern struggle for equality of opportunity.
 Talk to your political insurgent and he will tell you frankly that the direct primary system of nominations, the corrupt practices act, the recall, the initiative and referendum, or universal suffrage (if he goes that far) are merely means to an end. But if you ask him to what end, he has no definite answer. Talk to your progressive economic reformer and he will tell you that the regulation of railroads, the federal incorporation of capital doing interstate business, the conservation of natural resources and the prevention of child labor are but steps in the right direction. But ask him what it is that really lies as his ultimate goal in the right direction and he will shake his head. He does not know, any more than Mr. Riley's little boy where he is going nor what he is going to do—"when the world busts through."

 All of which proves that there is something in this forward movement. For when a reformer attempts to answer the third "then what?" he is either foolish or insincere. There stands always the impenetrable grindstone. The insurgent and the economic reformer does not pretend to say what is beyond it. But the socialist is impatient. He will have none of your mere "steps in the right direction." He pretends to see too far into the grindstone. Socialism claims to be too farsighted to be true. Real wisdom takes account of exceptions, sees qualifications, trusts something to the good God's grace and knows instinctively that it will do good to look in the back of the book for the answer to social problems.

 "WORLD BURSTS THROUGH."
 Modern Democracy Rightly Leaves a Question, W. A. White Says.
 Mr. James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, in some verses "Casualty Suggested by an Earthquake," puts the eternal riddle of humanity thus:
 Where's a boy a-goin',
 An' what's he goin' to do,
 An' how's he goin' to do it,
 When the world busts through?
 It is a serious question, writes William Allen White in the American Magazine. With the data now before humanity no one seems able to answer it. The explosion is called democracy. Neither Plato nor Christ
